At the San Francisco Museum of Modern Art restaurant, Akustika 10 Wall panels in charcoal felt cover the walls to soak up sound in a space that reimagines museum dining. The dining room is intentionally left partially raw and exposed with floating white art walls accented by steel aperture screens and Akustika 10 Wall panels which line the perimeter and pathways. The Akustika panels at various widths create a pattern of vertical seams to echo the steel screens and provide expanses of soft, all-natural wool.
