At the San Francisco office of an American multinational investment bank and financial services company, Triangle 90 Block in four felt colors creates a unifying graphic element throughout. By choosing four different colors (twenty-five percent each), the design firm was able to create multiple effects in each space. In the kitchen/break out room, a more random pattern was used. Whereas, in the copy and conference rooms, a gradient effect was used by weighting each of the spaces more heavily towards a specific hue—copy room more greys, conference room more blues.
